Sultan Abu Bakar Museum

A stunning white building constructed in the 1920s during the British Malaya era. It was the official residence of a British resident during colonial times, then an army barrack under the invading Japanese army during World War II, and then the official palace of Sultan Abu Bakar before being converted into a museum in 1976. Here, you will learn about the royal history of Pahang, as it showcases a well-documented history of the state and its royal house.

Islamic Museum Pekan

This so-called Taj Mahal of Malaysia does resemble its nickname. As you walk along the pathway from the Pahang State Museum, you'll see a water fountain right in front of the entrance, similar to Taj Mahal. The mosque is painted in crisp white and shines under the scorching sunlight, looking radiant under the sun. The mosque officially opened in 1932 and was used for religious activities back then, including Friday prayers. In the year 1977, Pahang State Museum Board took over the management of the mosque after it was no longer utilised and left to deteriorate. The board has now converted the mosque into an Islamic Intellectual and Art Museum due to its strategic location and the favourable potential as an exhibition gallery.

Sultan Abu Bakar Palace

The Sultan Abu Bakar Palace, which is the official residence of the present sultan, is named after the late Sultan Abu Bakar Riayatuddin Al-Muadzam Shah. Completed in 1974, the palace sits on a nicely landscaped piece of land that once was a rubber plantation. The palace is a fine example of authentic but modern Malay architecture. Before the palace was built, the late Sultan Abu Bakar resided at Kota Beram Palace, presently the State Museum at Jalan Sultan Ahmad.
